

"Ye must be born again."

Has it occurred to you that what Jesus meant by being born again (ie. born of the spirit rather than the flesh) was a reference to what happens to all of us when we die and leave this fleshly existence and are "born again" into the heavenly spirit realm? He was talking primarily about life after death. His Kingdom is a spiritual one, not a physical one. The only way to get into it is to die physically and be born spiritually. We experience this only partially during our earthly walk when we enter into a spiritual "state of mind." We experience it more fully after death. This does not mean that after death we all have the same experience. Salvation is achieved in degrees. In the Father's house there are many mansions (ie. dwelling places), some more glorious than others, metaphorically speaking.
